'People are dying' while sponsorship program sputters

SYRIA

Lawyer says feds can fix problem easily by dropping UN requirement

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Immigration lawyers in Toronto say Canada's refugee sponsorship program is broken, and they're calling on the federal government to fix it.

Barbara Jackman of Jackman, Nazami & Associates says the sponsorship process is more complicated and lengthy than it needs to be — especially in times of crisis.

"It's almost like Alice in Wonderland," she said.

Jackman's firm once tried to help a Syrian man bring his family to Canada, but by the time he finished navigating the sponsorship process, all five of his children were dead.

"Those people are desperately pulling their hair, and so are we," she said. "We can't help them."

Jackman said the government could expedite the process by dropping the requirement for refugees to be registered with the United Nations. The policy was introduced by the Conservatives in 2012, but in cases like Syria's, Jackman said it's impossible to get everyone registered quickly.

"This government is very effective at putting a spin on things," she said, adding the change could happen overnight if there was political will.

Mary Keyork, an immigration lawyer in Toronto, said the sponsorship program is also understaffed. Some visa offices have only one immigration supervisor to go through thousands of applications, she said.

"If we're sponsoring refugees, why not put up a special task force to quickly process their applications?" Keyork said. "People are dying. All this waiting only increases their trauma and puts them at higher risk."

BRAMPTON

Mayor wants LRT vote

Mayor Linda Jeffrey is dismissing the mediation process she once supported to find an acceptable LRT route in the city and wants to instead call a referendum on the issue.

But not before she tries to force a council vote on the route she has aggressively pushed for: the Metrolinx-approved alignment along Main Street.

Jeffrey told council in a statement last week that she was removing herself from last Wednesday's council decision to hire a facilitator because one of the applicants lobbied her for the job.

"I am seriously concerned with the integrity of this process — I believe it wouldn't stand up to public scrutiny and could successfully be challenged in the future," her statement said.

It also said she plans to call a council vote Sept. 16 on the LRT, although it's not clear what exactly the vote would be on. "If at that time this council indicates it is not willing or unable to vote on this issue," the statement says, Jeffrey will seek to hold a city-wide referendum.

Jeffrey's office said the mayor would not be available Tuesday to answer questions.

The LRT issue has divided the city. Those in favour of the route Jeffrey and the Liberal government have championed — a straight shot up Main Street to the downtown GO station — say the city's share of the $1.6-billion funding commitment from Queen's Park to cover the cost of the entire Hurontario-Main LRT could be put in jeopardy by rejecting it. Province searching for Finch West contractor

The Ontario government has kicked off the search for a contractor to build the $1.2-billion Finch West LRT.

The 11-kilometre line will have 18 stops between Humber College and an underground terminus at the new Finch West station on the Spadina extension.

The government's public-private partnership agency, Infrastructure Ontario, has asked for interested companies to submit their qualifications. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Underpass library quite a conversation starter

DOWNTOWN

Homeless man loaning out books at Lower Simcoe, Front

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

One homeless man in Toronto is sharing his passion for reading with the rest of the city.

Alex, who doesn't want his last name used, has built a free library near his makeshift bed beneath the underpass at Lower Simcoe and Front streets.

The new collection includes titles by Dan Brown and David Baldacci, as well as DVD copies of Casino and Scent of a Woman.

"The idea is to have people pick up the book and go read it," Alex said. "If they live in the neighbourhood, they can bring it back or bring another one for other people to read."

Alex has been on the streets for over two decades and describes himself as "happy and homeless." He's got a fondness for literature and said he reads about three books a week.

He's currently working his way through Sarah Helm's latest, If This Is a Woman, which chronicles women's lives in Nazi concentration camps.

After 20 years of homelessness, Alex said his book collection had become too large to fit in the shopping cart he uses to store his belongings. So he decided to leave the books in the underpass and let others borrow them.

"I'd love books to keep circulating. It's pretty good," he said. "It's amazing how many people love this idea."

One of the perks of being an amateur librarian is that passersby are more likely to stop and chat, Alex said.

"People were just staring at me before," he said. "I like people to stop and talk to me. It's easier when they see books and want to pick a copy."

Alex said a few people offered to pay him for the books, but he refused.

"If you want to be ridiculous with your money, why don't you buy me a book card instead," he said, adding one man recently gave him a $100 Indigo card.

BIOTECH

U.S. pharmaceutical giant opening lab in Toronto

Queen's Park has spent $19.4 million to lure a Johnson & Johnson biotech "incubator" lab to the MaRS discovery district.

Economic Development Minister Brad Duguid said the money, which comes from the government's existing 10-year, $2.5-billion Jobs and Prosperity Fund, will be more than matched by the U.S. pharmaceutical giant.

"Because of confidentiality and from a business perspective, Johnson & Johnson would prefer that the total amounts of their investment not be disclosed; it's a competitiveness issue," Duguid said Tuesday. "I can assure you that their investment is significantly more than ours."

The company will rent an entire floor of the University of Toronto-owned portion of the MaRS west tower for its first JLABS facility outside the U.S. The Toronto lab will be larger than its counterparts in Boston, Houston or San Francisco.

As it does at other JLABS, Johnson & Johnson, whose subsidiary Janssen is Canada's largest pharmaceutical company, will provide research facilities for small, independent biotech startups. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Beck Taxi petitions for decreased fares

TRANSPORTATION

Company says cabs need to be more competitive

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

One of Toronto's biggest taxi companies has started an online petition calling on the city to lower taxi fares.

"We have been hearing from the people who live in our city that they are looking for more affordable transportation," said Kristine Hubbard, Operations Manager at Beck Taxi. "We want that message to get to City Hall."

The city last set the taxi rate in 2008, and then the HST was added in 2010. It's currently $4.25 at the beginning of the ride, plus $0.25 every 0.143 km or part thereof.

Beck Taxi's operations manager wants to send a "message" to City Hall. LIZ BEDDALL/METRO

Most taxi drivers agree the rate is too high, and that's causing customers to choose UberX over taxis, said president of the drivers' association iTaxiworkers Sajid Mughal. But drivers only support lowering taxi rates if the other players in the taxi industry also lower their prices too, so the drivers don't bear the brunt of any reduction in revenue, he said.

That means the people who own taxi plates and lease them out should lower their lease rates, the garages that rent out shifts in vehicles to drivers should charge less, the insurance companies should reduce their rates and the city should cut its licensing fees, he said.

Taxi driver Muqeem Iqbal said the fee he pays to rent a taxi to drive has gone down since UberX came on the scene, but it hasn't been enough because the shift rental rates are hard to pay when there are fewer paying customers.

If everyone works together to lower costs in the taxi industry, then it could be competitive with UberX, he said. But if the rates come down and the other players in the industry don't budge, Iqbal thinks life would become very difficult for drivers.

"It would be very tough because the leases are very expensive, so it would be very tough for us to survive," he said.

UberX doesn't have the same costs built into its model, because its drivers use their own vehicles.

City recommends $1 drop in flat fees

Staff are proposing new rules to regulate Uber in Toronto and recommending that cab flat fees drop $1, to $3.25, to help the beleaguered taxi industry compete with the ride-hailing company, Torstar News Service has learned.

The recommendations are included in a new report by the municipal licensing and standards division, which earlier this year tried unsuccessfully to shut down Uber's operations with a court injunction, arguing that public safety was at risk.

City council voted in July to review the existing bylaws and to recommend changes to ensure the taxi business and Uber are on a level playing field.

The taxi industry says the UberX service, which allows passengers to hire regular drivers using a smartphone app — usually at prices cheaper than a taxi — has caused a dramatic drop in fare revenue.

After consulting with reps from Uber and the taxi industry, licensing staff came up with draft proposals for council, including the recommendation that the flat fee charged to passengers entering a cab in Toronto be lowered. Mayor John Tory has said he supports lower taxi fares.

The thrust of the other recommendations involves including Uber in a new bylaw with the creation of a new licensing category called Transportation Network Companies (TNC), a designation already in place in several U.S. cities, a source said.

T.O. needs Games: Aubut

OLYMPIC BID

COC chief thinks hosting will place city 'among the top'

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

Canadian Olympic Committee president Marcel Aubut speaks during a World Sport Luncheon in Montreal back in July. Aubut is pushing to have Toronto bid on the 2024 Olympics, and says the Games could be a windfall for municipal coffers. GRAHAM HUGHES/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hosting the 2024 Olympics could help Toronto finally achieve its goal of becoming a world-class city, says one of the most vocal proponents of the city's still-unofficial bid for the Games.

"I'm not saying it to hurt anybody, but I don't think Toronto has succeeded so far to host an international event that would bring the city among the top of the most-admired international cities," said Marcel Aubut, president of the Canadian Olympic Committee.

"The only way it's going to get there is by hosting the biggest show in the world. That's going to be a real short cut."

In addition to raising the city's international profile, Aubut said hosting the games could bring a sizable amount of cash into city coffers.

"The possibility to make money on the operation is absolutely huge," he said. "It's lots of money coming in from the International Olympic Committee (IOC), lots of money coming from the licensing, sponsorship and ticketing."

The IOC recently changed its policies, cutting the cost of bidding and hosting Olympic Games, Aubut said. As a result, he believes concerns about cost overruns and expensive venues that become underused "white elephants" after the Games are a thing of the past.

While he was happy to act as a booster for the Games, Aubut was less willing to discuss what bringing them Toronto would actually entail. He declined to offer specifics about costs, and wouldn't disclose which individuals or organizations in Toronto were working on the bid.

"There are lots of people, including politicians, leaders of business and the private sector and sponsors who are there ready to commit to go one step further," he said. "But I won't give you the list."

It's "difficult" for Olympic backers to be transparent at such an early stage, Aubut said, but he promised the public would learn more soon.

Pressed for details, Aubut would only say there will be "momentum" leading up to Sept. 15, the deadline for cities to tell the International Olympic Committee they're interested in bidding for the 2024 Games.

Group seeks review of Musik's licence

Councillors want troubled club dealt with

Downtown Toronto councillors want a provincial review of Muzik's liquor licence, with several calling for a temporary or permanent shutdown of the controversial nightclub at city-owned Exhibition Place.

Toronto-East York community council voted 8-0 Monday to recommend that council ask the Alcohol and Gaming Commission of Ontario for a public hearing on whether to "suspend or revoke" the club's licence.

The nine-year-old club has hosted many high-profile events but has a history of violence including the Aug. 4 gun slayings of Duvel Hibbert, 23, and 26-year-old Ariela Navarro-Fenoy.

It also has, since 2013, been cited by the AGCO for infractions including narcotic use on the premises and permitting disorderly behaviour.

"It's time for Toronto city council to say to Muzik nightclub: 'Enough is enough — you are not operating in the public interest," Coun. Gord Perks said. "We are going to demand that the (AGCO) pay attention to what the legislation says ... that they will suspend or revoke licenses where they are not in the public interest."

He and others accuse Muzik of using event sponsorships, including Police Chief Mark Saunders's Nov. 5 gala, and political and lobbyist connections, to curry favour.

Don Kelcher, whose home is close to Muzik, urged committee members to ask for the hearing. He said he and his neighbours are sick of deafening noise, rowdy behaviour and violence.

Michael Binetti, a lawyer for Muzik, failed to convince councillors that a public hearing is unwarranted.

The AGCO has already imposed new conditions, including installation of new security cameras, he said. The club is set to reopen Saturday with metal detectors at the door.

"That (licence) discussion was considered by the (AGCO) who decided to impose addition conditions on the licence which Muzik is respecting," Binetti said.

City council will at its Sept. 30 meeting consider community council's request, along with Exhibition Place board's recommendation that Muzik get a 10-year lease extension to 2034 without the usual tendering process.

Muzik owner Zlatko Starkovski told the board: "Considering we have had almost 2 million people in there, and those little charges over 10 years, it's an actual immaculate record in reality." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A Red Rocket read

Chris Bateman
For Metro | Toronto

TTC supervisor Richard Lee wants everyone in Toronto to know what life is really like for front-line transit employees.

In six years driving city buses, Lee says he has been verbally assaulted on numerous occasions and knows others who have been physically attacked.

"There have been times the f-bomb has been thrown at me," he said. "My parents are from Jamaica, and there have been times when customers have used my skin colour try to bring me down."

Lee has collected his own experiences and those of others in a book titled Get Onboard: Walk in the Shoes of a Transit Operator.

He hopes that the public will gain a better appreciation of what can sometimes be a tough and thankless job.

"There are operators who do awesome work, who go the extra mile to help customers and don't get attention from the public," he said.

TTC spokesman Chris Upfold said all public-facing employees are given customer service and de-escalation training, but verbal and sometimes physical assaults are still common. On average, one TTC employee is assaulted every day.

"That is the reality of the job," Upfold said. "You have to be proud and passionate about the role the TTC plays in Toronto to want to do that job."

Lee's book, which was released earlier this month, has already created a stir among TTC workers. "The operators have been praising the book," he said. "Many people have said there should have been a book out ages ago."

"I think it's a good story and an impressive piece of work he's put together," Upfold said. "We absolutely support him."

Kids removed from classes over sex-ed

Volunteers led gathering in O Canada, school studies

Toronto's Thorncliffe Park school — now the "epicentre" of the anti-sex-ed protest — was half-empty on the first day of classes as parents kept their children away in protest over the new health curriculum.

Instead, more than 100 kids gathered at the park adjacent to the school, sitting on tarps, divided by grade, as community volunteers took over teaching after they began their day by singing "O Canada."

Meanwhile, inside Canada's largest elementary school, Grade 1, 2, and 3 classes were running with about nine or 10 students each, and Grades 4 and 5 with 14 or 15.

Next door, the kindergarten-only Fraser Mustard Early Learning Academy saw just 326 of the expected 510 students in attendance, even though there is no sex education in either year of kindergarten.

"This is unprecedented," said Thorncliffe principal Jeff Crane, who'd expected 1,460 students to show up, but ended up with 781. In the morning, a line of parents formed outside the school, near Don Mills Road. and Overlea Boulevard, to submit letters explaining that they object to the "radical sex-ed curriculum" and that formal notice of home-schooling or a move to a private school is on the way.

Some parents say they'll keep their kids out for a month to make a point, while others vow to remove their kids from the system entirely.

Opponents of the sex-ed curriculum have said parents were not properly consulted on the changes, and that the material is age-inappropriate or conflicts with their religious beliefs.

Premier Kathleen Wynne said she hopes parents who have concerns won't do anything rash.

"I think it's very unfortunate if parents decide to take their kids out of school altogether," she told reporters at Queen's Park.

Mom Afsheen Shahid brought her two boys to the outdoor lessons, saying she's frustrated that the "government is not giving any importance to parents and our values."

"Unfortunately, we chose (Kathleen Wynne) and now when she is chosen, she has forgotten all about us," she said.

Ex-barista alleges assault

Shannon Mishimagi says all she wanted was to feel safe again.

The 23-year-old student and former Starbucks barista claims that, instead, she was scheduled to work under a supervisor about whom she had complained to management, alleging he had physically assaulted and threatened her.

The allegations are now the subject of a $1-million lawsuit against Starbucks Canada, which Mishimagi claims failed to uphold their duty to make her workplace safe, and the supervisor, Gurjaspreet Jolly.

The company has not yet filed a statement of defence. Torstar News Service was unable to reach Jolly. None of the allegations have been proven in court.

Torstar was referred to Starbucks' corporate office when it called Mishimagi's former workplace at Bloor Street West and Runnymede Road, seeking a response to the allegations. In an emailed statement, a Starbucks Canada spokesperson said the company was "committed to providing a supportive and safe work environment" for its employees.

"Starbucks has robust policies and procedures for investigating partner complaints, which we have employed in this case.

Shannon Mishimagi CONTRIBUTED

Since this is a personal matter involving one of our partners (employees), the details are confidential," the statement added.

The Ryerson University fashion communications major says she hopes her case will help focus attention on the rights of young, precarious workers in low-wage jobs.

"It's a lot of emotion," Mishimagi told Torstar after her statement of claim was delivered to her former employer Friday. "I feel good in standing up."

According to allegations in the statement of claim, Mishimagi was "physically assaulted, verbally abused, and was physically threatened multiple times" by her supervisor. The claim provides no further details of the alleged assault, but in an interview with Torstar, Mishimagi said her supervisor approached her from behind and "aggressively" touched her.

Mishimagi's lawyer, Saron Gebresellassi, says a claim against the supervisor has also been filed with police. Torstar has been unable to confirm this with police. No charges have been laid.

The statement of claim alleges Mishimagi's supervisor had displayed a pattern of intimidating behaviour prior to the alleged assault including "threats to use various harmful substances in hazardous ways toward Mishimagi, and use of violent, disrespectful and threatening gestures."

She told Torstar she was "in shock" at the time of the alleged assault on Oct. 31, 2014.

According to the statement of claim, even after learning of the incident, Starbucks "failed to act on the report in any matter."

Mishimagi was also required to work alongside Jolly after she made her complaint, the statement of claim says. Even after he was transferred to a different Starbucks location, she was "continuously faced with the possibility of encountering (him) while completing her shifts."

Archeologists dig up history of city

HERITAGE

St. Lawrence Market artifacts date as far back as the 1800s

Chris Bateman
For Metro | Toronto

Archeologists have unearthed a trove of historical remains beneath St. Lawrence Market, the city revealed Tuesday.

Over the last few months, brick walls, foundation piers and a "ridiculously impressive" stone sewer pipe have been found beneath the North St. Lawrence Market building at Front and Jarvis.

"(The findings) date back to when Toronto was a little glint," said historian Rollo Myers, who helped organize the dig.

The property has been a site of commerce for more than two centuries. It was allocated as a trading post in 1803, and various market buildings have occupied the site ever since.

For roughly a decade in the 1830s and 40s, the property also doubled as Toronto's town and city hall.

Peter Popkin, a senior archeologist on the site, says his team's discoveries date from 1831, 1851 and 1904.

"The market would have been a central economic hub for the city; everybody would have come to the market," he said. "It's one of the most important pieces of historical property within the city."

The sewer, which dates back to 1831, is particularly well preserved, Popkin said. "It's a big flagstone structure with an arch ... It's got iron grates to keep anything massive getting sucked down."

The current north market was built in 1968. It's currently being prepared for demolition and will eventually be replaced by a new multi-storey market and courthouse.

Despite their significance, the artifacts will have to be relocated, Myers said. The area is slated to become a parking garage, so the findings will be documented and preserved at another location.

FOUND IN THE GROUND PAST DISCOVERIES IN TORONTO

Ancient human remains
In 1956, human bones were found inside what was presumed to be a natural hill near Lawrence Avenue and Bellamy Road. Detailed investigation revealed that Taber Hill was in fact an Iroquois burial mound from around 1250 AD, containing some 427 bodies.

Shark teeth
In 1894, Toronto newspapers reported that two shark teeth had been found in the foundation pit of the new Board of Trade building at Front and Yonge streets. What no one could work out, however, was how the incisors came to be there. One of the teeth was reportedly displayed at the Royal Ontario Museum several years later.

A French cannon
While preparing the ground for construction of the SkyDome in 1987, consultant John Fahee found a lump of metal that later turned out to be a 2.7-metre French cannon. Judging by scratches on the outside of the eight-pound weapon, it was probably used as a bumper on the outside of a ship before being discarded.

Toronto's first market was built in 1831 on the site of the St. Lawrence Market. But it's not the only part of the city that's yielded fascinating finds. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A whale bone
In the late 1980s, construction crews excavating the Queens Quay streetcar tunnel unearthed a piece of whale vertebra. Subsequent examination revealed it to be from an Orca skeleton. How it ended up in the ground in Toronto has never been conclusively proven.

Province able to 'take more refugees,' says Wynne

Ontario is pledging more support for refugees and pressing for federal help in opening the doors wider with the Syrian exodus growing more dramatic by the day.

"We have more capacity in Ontario to take more refugees, to welcome more refugees," Premier Kathleen Wynne said Tuesday.

The comments came four days after her health minister, Dr. Eric Hoskins, pledged an additional $300,000 in provincial funding to help settle people fleeing Syria.

"We can put more supports in place for private organizations and individuals who are working, like Lifeline Syria ... to bring refugees into Ontario," added Wynne, who is working with her church to raise money to help refugees.

"We are going to put some of those supports in place, we are going to set up a fund that would help support those organizations do everything we can to make sure that when refugees arrive here, that they can access programs that will help them to settle."

The premier said she's concerned with the length of time it is taking for refugees to get documentation.

"My hope would be that we will see the federal government work with the provinces to speed up the process whereby refugees can come into the country and into our province," she added.

Premier says supports must be in place

British Columbia will set aside $1 million to help support Syrian refugees who manage to make their way to the province, Premier Christy Clark announced at a news conference Tuesday.

While the province doesn't have any say over how many refugees it can accept, Clark said it will be ready to help with services such as trauma counselling, language skills and job placements should the federal government accept more people.

"It's just not good enough to only open our doors, we have to make sure that when refugees get there we're doing everything we can to help them achieve the Canadian dream and find their home as seamlessly as possible into British Columbia society," Clark said.

The fund, which will be distributed through community groups and churches, was created after the outpouring of support for Syrian refugees in response to the photograph of three-year-old Alan Kurdi's body washed ashore on a Turkish beach.

> Premier Christy Clark

His death brought the ongoing crisis home for British Columbians, as the little boy's family was trying to find a way to B.C., Clark said, tearing up as she spoke of his tiny figure on the sand. Thousands have since expressed the desire to help sponsor refugees.

Clark didn't wade into the political debate over how many refugees the federal government should accept, but argued all provinces should have the same power as Quebec to determine how many refugees they can take in.

Last year B.C. welcomed about 36,000 immigrants, including 1,528 refugees. Clark said it would be great to see both numbers go up.

"(The Kurdis) didn't die because they were anything but unlucky enough to live in a country wracked by war," Clark said. "As Canadians we are incredibly lucky, and as Canadians we have an opportunity, and I would argue a uniquely Canadian duty, to share the luck."

ELECTION 2015

Poll: Yes to deficit

Justin Trudeau may have taken a gamble when he announced the Liberals would run deficits if they form the next government. But it's a gamble that could well pay off, if the results of a new poll are any indication.

A poll conducted by Forum Research last week found that only a minority of voters believe the government should focus on balancing the books during a slow economy.

With the Canadian economy sliding into a recession during first half of 2015, the Conservatives and NDP have both made balancing the budget the cornerstone of their economic plans.

But last month Trudeau struck out on his own and said a Liberal government would run modest deficits until 2019. While dipping into the red, the Liberals would spend an additional $60 billion over 10 years on infrastructure projects, which the party believes would stimulate the economy.

That platform move could be good news for Trudeau.

Just 18 per cent agreed that the government's best strategy during tough economic times is to "impose austerity and cut spending to eliminate deficits." But nearly half — or 45 per cent — agreed that it's better to invest in infrastructure.

And 44 per cent approved of Trudeau's plan to run deficits for three years after the election, while 38 per cent disapproved.

The Forum poll was conducted using an interactive voice response telephone survey of 1,384 Canadians. It was conducted from Aug. 30 to Sept. 1, and is considered accurate plus or minus three percentage points, 19 times out of 20.

VICTORIA STRAIT EXPEDITION

Feds looked to cash in on Franklin find, emails show

Steve Rennie
Metro | Ottawa

Federal bureaucrats looked into whether Canada could collect a 164-year-old reward offered by the British government to anyone who found the lost ships of Sir John Franklin's doomed Arctic expedition, newly released documents show.

The HMS Erebus, HMS Terror and their crews vanished during an 1845 quest for the Northwest Passage. Their mysterious disappearance captured the Victorian imagination and gave rise to many searches throughout the 19th century for Franklin and his crew.

In 1850, the British government offered 20,000 pounds to anyone who "shall discover and effectually relieve the crews of Her Majestys' ships 'Erebus' and 'Terror.'" 10,000 pound rewards were offered for information that led to the ships' discovery, or to anyone who could ascertain the fate of the expedition.

Fast-forward 164 years: In September 2014, a Canadian search team found the wreck of HMS Erebus off the coast of Nunavut's King William Island. The search continues for HMS Terror.

Stephen Harper could barely contain his delight last year as he delivered news of the "great, historic" breakthrough.

Even the Queen weighed in, saying, "Prince Philip joins me in sending congratulations and good wishes to all those who played a part in this historic achievement," in a statement.

But documents obtained by Metro under the Access to Information Act suggest federal bureaucrats may have hoped for more than just congratulations from across the pond. On Sept. 11, 2014, a bureaucrat posted to the Canadian High Commission in London emailed a colleague in Ottawa about the discovery of one of the Franklin ships.

"Seems that there are several parts of the system working on this, but I need your advice," she wrote. "PCO (Privy Council Office) contacted us yesterday to ask whether we are entitled to the reward, given the poster which I attach for your information."

Her colleague replied that the poster — dated March 7, 1850 — was somewhat difficult to read but instructed her to "go ahead and collect the information requested by PCO and maybe obtain a more easily readable copy of the poster."

The bureaucrat consulted the curator at Royal Museums Greenwich, who told her that some of the reward money had already been collected in the 1850s.

The British government awarded explorer John Rae 10,000 pounds in 1854 for information he had relayed about the Franklin expedition, the curator said, while Sir Francis Leopold McClintock and his crew also received 5,000 pounds reward by a vote of Britain's parliament after their 1859 expedition.

The bureaucrat's colleague in Ottawa acknowledged Canada probably wasn't going to collect any reward money from the United Kingdom.

It's not clear how seriously the Privy Council Office — which is the bureaucratic arm of the Prime Minister's Office — was seized with collecting the reward from the U.K. Many parts of the documents are censored.

No one from Foreign Affairs or the Privy Council Office was available for comment.

SYRIA CRISIS

Hungary speeds up work on fence to block them

Hungarian authorities on Tuesday began busing weary migrants and refugees to a nearby registration centre, defusing some tensions at Hungary's southern border with Serbia. But the human tide hardly ebbed, with a steady stream of people seen trying to approach Hungary, their gateway into the European Union.

Hungary has made frantic and confused efforts to control the huge number of migrants transiting the country as they try to reach Germany, leaving many trapped for days outside the border village of Roszke and furious at their treatment by Hungarian authorities. On Tuesday, Prime Minister Viktor Orban announced fresh efforts to complete a fence to keep the refugees out.

The UN refugee agency, meanwhile, said it is concerned about the lack of proper reception facilities in the border area and that humanitarian aid needs to be stepped up there.

Babar Baloch said Tuesday that "the border police are not trained to deal with the refugees."

"When people come in you need to receive them properly. There are women and children and they are just kept in the open. Temperatures are going down as well so we need to have a system where these people receive proper care," he said.

Earlier in the day, refugees anxious to pass through Hungary who were frustrated at being trapped behind a police line began pushing and police shoved back. One man was hurt in a stampede.

"We've been here for two days and the Hungarian government only brings one bus?" said a Syrian man, who gave only his first name, Ali. "We're asking to go back to Serbia and they are not giving us this right. We're asking to go to Budapest and they are not giving us this right. Why? Why?"

Despite the efforts of volunteers offering water and some clothes, there were few amenities at the border. The area was strewn with garbage and more people could be seen walking along railroad tracks in Serbia on their way to Hungary. Many slept outdoors in a field during a cold night. MARRIAGE EQUALITY

Jailed clerk lauded on release

The Kentucky county clerk who was jailed for refusing to issue marriage licenses to gay couples was released Tuesday after five days behind bars, emerging to a tumultuous reception from thousands of cross-waving supporters.

"I just want to give God the glory. His people have rallied, and you are strong,'' she told the crowd after stepping outside, her arms raised like a victorious boxer, to the blaring Rocky theme song "Eye of the Tiger." She added: "Keep on pressing.''

Her lawyer refused to say whether she would defy the courts again.

"Kim cannot and will not violate her conscience," said Mat Staver, founder of the Liberty Counsel, the Christian law firm representing Davis. As for whether she will issue licenses, Staver said only: "You'll find out in the near future."

The Rowan County clerk whose jailing helped make her a hero to the religious right walked free after the federal judge who ordered her locked up lifted the contempt order against her, saying he was satisfied that her deputies were fulfilling their obligation to grant licenses to same-sex couples in her absence.

But U.S. District Judge David Bunning also warned Davis not to interfere again.

As the news spread, a crowd of dozens of supporters who had gathered on the jailhouse lawn for a previously scheduled rally swelled.

They broke into "Amazing Grace" and "God Bless America" and waved signs, flags and large white crosses.

She emerged next to Republican presidential candidate Mike Huckabee and her husband, who was in blue dungarees and a straw hat. Huckabee and fellow GOP White House candidate Sen. Ted Cruz visited her in jail just after the decision came down.

"If somebody has to go to jail, I'm willing to go in her place. I believe that," said Huckabee, a former Baptist minister and Arkansas governor.

He added: "She has shown more courage than any politician I know. She not only said something, she was willing to put her life at risk."

Davis was locked up on Thursday for the boldest act of resistance by a public official yet to the U.S. Supreme Court ruling in June that effectively legalized gay marriage across the nation.

Pope fast-tracks new annulments

DIVORCE

Church will overhaul rules for dissolved marriages

Pope Francis radically reformed the process for annulling marriages Tuesday, overhauling 300 years of church practice by creating a new fast-track annulment and doing away with an automatic appeal that often slowed the process down.

The move, which came a week after he said he was letting all rank-and-file priests grant absolution to women who have had abortions, was further evidence of his desire to make the church more responsive to the needs of ordinary faithful.

The new law on annulments goes into effect Dec. 8, the start of Francis's Holy Year of Mercy, a yearlong jubilee during which the pope hopes to emphasize the merciful side of the church. It will speed up and simplify the annulment process by placing the onus squarely on bishops around the world to determine when a fundamental flaw has made a marriage invalid.

CONTEXT

Speedy separations

Previously, most people seeking annulments needed to go before a three-judge panel unless a regional bishops' conference gave a bishop permission to hear the case or to appoint one judge to handle it. The new law makes that an immediate option, meaning annulments should be easier to obtain in dioceses without enough priests.

A Catholic needs a church annulment to remarry in the church, and a divorced Catholic who remarries civilly without one is considered an adulterer living in sin and is forbidden from receiving Communion.

The Communion issue is at the centre of debate at the upcoming synod of bishops, a three-week meeting that gets underway in October. Progressive bishops favour a process by which these Catholics could eventually have access to the sacrament if they repent; conservatives say there can be no such wiggle room and that church teaching is clear that a marriage is indissoluble.

Catholics have long complained that it can take years to get an annulment, if they can get one at all. Costs can reach into the hundreds or thousands of dollars for legal and tribunal fees.

"With this fundamental law, Francis has now launched the true start of his reform," said Monsignor Pio Vito Pinto, the head of the Roman Rota, the church's marriage court. "He is putting the poor at the centre and asking for bishops to have a true change of heart."

POLICE DEATH

Gray family, Baltimore settle at $6.4M

The parents of Freddie Gray reached a tentative $6.4 million settlement with the city of Baltimore, nearly five months after their 25-year-old son was critically injured in police custody, sparking days of protests and rioting.

The deal, announced Tuesday, appeared to be among the largest settlements in police death cases in recent years and happened just days before a judge is set to decide whether to move a trial for six officers charged in Gray's death.

Grey's spine was injured April 12 in the back of a prisoner transport van after he was arrested. Gray, a black man, died at the hospital a week later.

In the aftermath, Gray became a symbol of the contentious relationship between the police and the public in Baltimore, as well as the treatment of black men by police in America.

The settlement still needs the approval of a board that oversees city spending. That board will meet Wednesday morning.

"The proposed settlement agreement going before the Board of Estimates should not be interpreted as a judgment on the guilt or innocence of the officers facing trial," Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake said in a news release.

Rawlings-Blake refused to comment further on Tuesday at an unrelated news conference.

The settlement does not resolve any factual disputes, and expressly does not constitute an admission of liability on the part of the city, its police department or any of the officers.

The settlement has nothing whatsoever to do with the criminal proceedings, the press release said.

Five dead in sandstorm

NATURAL DISASTERS

Thousands injured across countries in Middle East

An unseasonal sandstorm swept across the Mideast on Tuesday, blanketing Beirut and Damascus, causing the deaths of at least five people and sending hundreds of others to hospitals with breathing difficulties, officials said.

Reduced visibility prompted the Syrian government to call off airstrikes against rebel fighters, local media reported, and threatened planned protests by Lebanese activists over the government's inability to deal with the country's rampant trash crisis.

The storm also hit Jordan, Israel and Egypt. In Jordan, schools shut down or cut their days short.

Syria's state-run news agency SANA said three people in the central Hama province died from the sandstorm, without elaborating, and said there were more than 3,500 cases of people with breathing difficulties across several provinces.

The sandstorm reached Beirut on Tuesday, a day after it engulfed eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley. People, especially those with health issues, were advised to stay indoors while many of those who ventured onto the streets donned surgical masks.

The Lebanese Health Ministry said 750 people suffered breathing problems across the country, and that two women died because of the sandstorm, without providing details. Two boats set adrift were rescued by coast guard, the National News Agency said. Airport officials reported some flight delays.

Lebanese authorities warned residents against burning trash that has piled up on Beirut streets this summer, sparking a political crisis and daily protests.

Uber, Intact team up to insure drivers

ON-DEMAND ECONOMY

Partnership aims to ensure all regulations are satisified

One of Canada's largest auto insurance providers is teaming with Uber to create products tailored for the ride-hailing service, after concerns emerged that some insurance policies may not cover drivers using their personal vehicles for commercial gain.

Intact Financial Corp. said it is also working with insurance regulators and various levels of government in provinces where Uber is available to ensure the products that it develops are in line with regulatory requirements.

The insurer said it was too early to provide details about the products, which it plans to market under the Intact and Belairdirect brands.

"With the growing popularity of the sharing and on-demand economy, we are adapting our product range to offer innovative solutions to meet the changing needs of consumers," Louis Gagnon, president of service and distribution at Intact Financial Corp., said in a statement.

Questions began swirling around Uber's insurance policies after the Alberta government said in July that it had determined the policies do not meet the requirements of the province's Insurance Act.

Uber Canada has argued that its insurance policies are adequate. A spokeswoman for the company said in July that every ride on the uberX platform is backed by $5 million of commercial auto insurance, which covers both bodily injuries and property damage stemming from a crash. THE CANADIAN PRESS

GENDER INEQUALITY

UN agency fights for global wage parity

A UN agency is mounting a worldwide campaign for equal pay for women, who get 24 per cent less than men on global average and around 30 per cent less for those in Asia.

Recent estimates by the International Labor Organization indicates gender inequality in employment across Asia alone is costing $45 billion a year, with 45 per cent of working-age women outside the labour force compared to 19 per cent for men, the leader of the UN Women agency, Phumzile Mlambo-Ngcuka, told a forum at the Asian Development Bank headquarters.

She said if female employment were to match male employment, per capita GDP would rise 19 per cent in Southeast Asia and 27 per cent in the Middle East and North Africa.

"We are definitely going to go on a major campaign on equal pay — this is one of the issues we are putting to heads of state, we are also putting that to private sector," she said.

UN Women is pushing for the implementation of a standalone goal on gender equality and empowerment for women and girls known as Goal 5 of the 17 Sustainable Development Goals to be launched at the UN at the end of the month. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

URBAN ETIQUETTE ELLEN VANSTONE

THE QUESTION

I've been away at school for four days. Already my mom and aunt have left me like 10 messages. My plan is pay-as-you-go. Is it rude to have your voice mail tell people not to leave long messages, or not to leave a message at all?

Dear Ellen,

I just left home for the first time to go to school, and part of the deal is I have to pay for my own cellphone with a part-time job, which is fine — I'm happy to be independent but I've only been away four days and already my mom and my aunt have left like 10 voice messages and my cellphone plan is pay-as-you-go but I feel like I'm paying just to hear their messages and return their calls which I think is unfair but is it rude to have your phone message tell people not to leave long messages or not to leave a message at all cuz obviously I can see that they called?

Adele in Ottawa

Dear Adele,

Wow, I don't know where to begin — with your predilection for unpunctuated, run-on sentences or your mother's predilection for helicopter parenting. And what's with the aunt? You don't sound like a person who needs this much supervision. You're attending post-secondary school and paying your own cellphone bills. Kudos! (That's not a misspelled endorsement, though I hear they're not bad). And you are obviously a polite and considerate person, if you are taking the time to inquire about the proper treatment of adults who are persecuting you with their overly controlling concerns though to be fair I suppose we have to credit mom and the aunt for instilling that politeness in you in the first place oh no now you've got me doing the run-on sentence thing it's like a deadly spiral in whose grip I'm mindlessly mixing metaphors and losing all sense of punctuation must hit return key NOW—

The helicopter parent will always tell you to be honest and stand up for yourself, not to be afraid to set boundaries, etc. But they don't believe you should follow this advice toward them.

OK. Adele. There is nothing rude about an outgoing message that asks callers to text rather than leave a voice mail. In fact, by tacitly reminding callers that you can glance at a text message in a nanosecond and respond in another nanosecond without having to dial into your voice mail, wait for all the prompts and listen to someone laboriously state the obvious (i.e., they just called you and they want you to call them back), you'd be doing your contacts the courtesy of telling them how best to reach you. Of course, most people under the age of 40 will already know not to leave a voice-mail message, so clearly you'd be targeting certain female relatives, who I'm assuming are over the age of 40. But they likely won't realize the message is meant specifically for them, so it's OK.

Having said that, I think we both know it won't work. Helicopter parents — and their loyal sidekicks, helicopter aunts — will always tell you to be honest and stand up for yourself, not to be afraid to set boundaries, etc. But they don't actually believe you should follow this advice toward them.

The important thing is they raised a good kid in you, and they can't help who they are. Helicoptering is more addictive than meth, and they're going through agonizing withdrawal right now. They can't think straight.

So be kind. Calm them down by calling them unbidden once in a while. Commit to a VoIP call at least once a week.

And try to use more punctuation.

Now I'm engaged, and I find loneliness has gone nowhere

In May, Briony Smith wrote an article for Chatelaine about the loneliness of the single life.

When I read it, I thought: "I could have written that, or something like that, only a year ago." During a six-year stretch of singledom, I'd done my best to define myself in the world on my own terms, as a lone woman, only to continually face the fact that deeper happiness, on my terms, required love.

Even when I have a husband, a dog and some kids, loneliness will come stand quietly behind me and blow at my neck: Remember me?

But now I'm engaged, and I find loneliness has gone nowhere. It still wafts into the day like a cold draft, startling me.

The man I'm going to marry lives in the U.S., and the comfort of his love doesn't mute the echo of a day spent alone. It doesn't sweep away the extra space that I feel all around me, in a busy park on a hot day, eating watermelon on a blanket, by myself.

I started to wonder if I'd always felt alone — and yes, I have. As a child, as a teenager, off-kilter among friends, as if we were looking in the same direction and seeing different things.

Loneliness sat beside me before the fireplace in my family home and hung around the studio apartment I moved into, like faint dust in the air. It seemed present in every stone cranny of expansive London and grew bolder in Colombia, a three-month blip of learning, alienation and regret. It blossomed back in small Victoria when I had no job or prospect of one. It tagged along to Toronto and has come and gone like sun behind clouds.

I am beginning to believe I should be getting used to it. That even when I have a husband, a dog and some kids, loneliness will come stand quietly behind me and blow at my neck: Remember me?

In recent years, both the Guardian and Globe and Mail have warned of a loneliness crisis. A New York-based writer is publishing a book on the emotion next year. But if loneliness is pervasive, that is not new. If this is the Lonesome Valley, it's been that way, probably, forever.

And isn't that the ultimate relief? As a woman said to me last week: you're never the only one. Even if you are walking by yourself.

And now I'm a national expert in the field of income-generating properties in the United States!

YOU DON'T NEED MONEY OR CREDIT TO OBTAIN WEALTH IN US REAL ESTATE!

The profits in income-producing properties are amazing. It's simple to do, and it happens fast when you know my "insider" secrets. You don't have to quit your job. You don't need to open an expensive office. You don't need a real estate license and you don't need to spend a lot of time to start. You don't even need to travel to the US – but you may want to spend some time in the sun visiting your money-making properties!

5 DAYS OF SANDWICHES

Back to school? More like back to packed lunches! Have no fear, Ricardo magazine has done all the work so you don't have to. Here's a week's worth of inspiration for that perennial midday meal. Find a month's worth of sandwiches and detailed recipes at ricardocuisine.com/lunches. PHOTOS AND TEXT COURTESY RICARDO MAGAZINE

Chicken, grape and nut

A wink at Waldorf salad, this lunchtime delight takes a chicken salad mix — diced cooked chicken, finely chopped green onions, Greek yogurt, mayo, salt and pepper — and adds some quartered red seedless grapes, chopped toasted pecans and whole-grain mustard. Stuffed into a ciabatta roll, it's simply magnificent.

Crunchy vegetable and veggie pâté

This is the perfect choice when you're craving that fresh-veggie crunch. Thinly slice some English cucumber, radishes and celery. Combine and season. Spread mayo on two slices of country bread. On the bottom piece, layer slices of our Veggie Pâté (see ricardocuisine.com for the recipe). Pile on the vegetables, then close with the top slice.

Cold pork roast

Mix mayo, whole-grain mustard and chopped chives together. Spread on toasted slices of country bread, and layer lettuce and thin slices of cold roast pork (find our mouth-watering recipe at ricardocuisine.com).

Chicken and wild rice salad

This recipe is all about texture. Cook some wild rice in salted water for about 50 minutes or until tender. Add chopped dried cranberries and cook for another 5 minutes. Drain and rinse under cold water. Combine with cooked diced chicken, sour cream, mayo and chopped chives, then stuff into pita bread with some lettuce leaves.

Nordic shrimp

Combine cooked Nordic shrimp, cubed green apple, sliced green onion, chopped fresh tarragon, mayo, salt and pepper in a bowl. Cut a fresh, buttery croissant in half and place a lettuce leaf inside. Pile on the delicious shrimp salad and close the croissant.

COUNTRY-WIDE CELEBRATION

Garlic festival reveals tart bulb's unexpected sweet side

Lovers of the "stinking rose" will have plenty of opportunities to sample its pungent delights during festivals devoted to garlic.

Visitors may be surprised to learn there are dozens of strains of garlic and that the cloves can be used in both savoury and sweet dishes.

Twenty chefs will be on hand at the fifth Toronto Garlic Festival on Sept. 20 to concoct such dishes as savoury garlic ribs and roasted corn with garlic butter.

"We also have some more things that will challenge the palate," says festival founder Peter McClusky.

"For example, we do garlic and dessert items. People are always surprised by this and raise an eyebrow. They're always happily surprised when they taste it."

A chocolatier is creating a dark chocolate truffle with black garlic.

"Black garlic is fermented garlic. It has kind of a tarry texture. It's got a flavour like licorice or coffee, chocolate, very dark deep flavour," says McClusky, who grows eight strains of garlic on a farm east of Guelph, Ont.

Caramelization occurs when garlic is roasted, releasing its sweeter, more mellow elements.

Other sweets include macarons with roasted garlic, toasted homemade marshmallows with black garlic, roasted garlic chocolate ice cream — which always sells out, McClusky notes — and black garlic butter tarts.

Other celebrations of garlic include the Verona, Ont., festival (Sept. 13), the Hills Garlic Festival in New Denver, B.C. (Sept. 13), the Stratford Kiwanis Garlic Festival, (Sept. 12-13), and Andrew, Alta.'s, annual festival on Thanksgiving weekend.

Tacos, meet seaweed

TEX-MEX

Asian-fusion that packs a crunch

Can you handle just one more Asian-fusion taco?

You're rolling your eyes. But what if it's one that's easy enough and delicious enough to truly be worth making at home?

Truth is, most of the popular Tex-Mex-Asian blends have been produced in food trucks and brick-and-mortar joints that are far flung from most North Americans (because though Los Angeles and New York City hate to admit it, the vast majority of North America doesn't live in either city).

The result is that most folks only get to read about the deliciousness that is Asian flavours packaged in a Tex-Mex-friendly delivery system.

So the goal was to break down those flavours into something easily reproduced at home.

And the end result: beefy seaweed taco with jalapeno-jicama slaw.

Let's start with the beefy. For a bold steaky flavour, go with flank.

But you may want as much Asian savoury goodness as possible, so rather than cook it whole, thinly slice it across the grain, then give it a bath in a blend of fish sauce, soy sauce and toasted sesame oil. It takes just a couple minutes in the pan to give the sear you want.

The steak gets piled on top of that ubiquitous green of lower rung sushi joints — seaweed salad.

You know you love it, even if it is dyed fluorescent green.

You'll find it at most Asian markets (and many natural foods grocers sell non-coloured versions).

On top of that goes a quick slaw made from crunchy jicama tossed with citrus juice and jalapenos. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE TRY THIS AT HOME

Beef Seaweed Tacos With Jalapeno-Jicama Slaw

Start to finish: 30 minutes
Servings: 4

Ingredients:

- 3 Tbsp fish sauce
- 3 Tbsp low-sodium soy sauce
- 2 Tbsp sesame oil
- 2 Tbsp sugar
- 1 lb flank steak
- 1 cup jicama, cut into matchsticks
- 1 jalapeno, thinly sliced
- 2 Tbsp orange juice
- 2 Tbsp lime juice
- Kosher salt and ground black pepper
- Eight 6-inch corn tortillas
- 1/2 Tbsp cornstarch
- 1 cup seaweed salad
- 1/2 cup crumbled queso fresco or blanco cheese

Directions

Heat the oven to 200 F.

In a large bowl, whisk together the fish sauce, soy sauce, 1 tablespoon of the sesame oil and the sugar. Slice the steak across the grain into very thin strips, then add to the fish sauce mixture. Toss to coat evenly, then set aside for 10 minutes.

In a medium bowl, toss together the jicama and jalapenos, then add the orange and lime juices. Toss again to coat. Taste, then season with salt and pepper. Set aside.

Stack the tortillas and wrap them in foil. Set the packet in the oven to warm.

In a large skillet over medium-high, heat the remaining 1 tablespoon of sesame oil. Use tongs to remove the meat from the marinade, letting as much liquid as possible drip off back into the bowl and reserving the marinade. Transfer the steak strips to paper towels and lightly pat dry. Add the dried steak strips to the skillet and cook only until just barely seared, about 1 minute.

Whisk the cornstarch into the reserved marinade, then add the mixture to the skillet and cook for another minute.

Remove the warmed tortillas from the oven. Spread a spoonful of the seaweed salad, then top with strips of steak. Top with jicama-jalapeno slaw, then finish with sprinkle of the cheese.

Serve immediately.

It's OK to drink white after Labour Day

Peter Rockwell
For Metro Canada

With summer drawing to a close, many of you are probably packing away your white pants and, unfortunately, slowing down your white wine intake.

I'm not sure who came up with the old wives' tale that white wine consumption is exclusively a warm weather thing.

Though some reds can come across bland at best and flabby at worst when sipped in the heat, the refreshing flavours of whites are a joy no matter what the weather outside.

White blends (those made from a multitude of grape varieties) have been on trend of late thanks to their layers of complexity that keep on giving to the last drop.

California's Conundrum ($22.79-$26.79) is the granddaddy of New World white blends.

First released in 1989, it's a secret combination of at least five grapes.

The 2013 vintage is a feast of floral aromas and ripe, orchard fruit that drinks as easily with summer salads and seafood as it will with Christmas dinner.

Prices reflect the range across the country. Some products may not be available in all provinces.

MUSHROOMS

'Tis the season for these tasty treats full of vitamin D

Theresa Albert
For Metro Canada

Foraging for mushrooms is the most dangerous outdoor activity of the season. But I am intrepid and my grandpa was eccentric and showed me how to pick and cook puffballs. Fair warning: this is a tale of courage to not replicate. You should only forage with an experienced guide.

Puffballs grow on the lawns of wide-open spaces. The edible ones are bigger than four inches long and are much heavier than they look. They are smooth skinned and pale brown on the outside but solid, firm marshmallow white through the interior. Species with gills or tough elephant-like skins are poisonous. The ones I found were just like the ones grandpa showed me. So I did it! I picked and prepared and let my eyes roll back in my head — with the ecstasy of taste, not the disaster of poison.

All mushrooms:

- Contain high amounts of trace minerals
- Contain vitamins D and B
- Contain the beta glucan starch similar to that in oats in that helps manage cholesterol
- Are very porous with high water content and will absorb any flavour you throw at them
- Need to be cooked in a heavy pan on very high heat with ample butter and minimal mushrooms. If they are crowded, they steam to grey mush.

This time of year, farmers' markets are full of wild and cultivated species so you won't have to risk your life on the wisdom of gramps.

Limiting water to olive trees ups good elements in oil

A team of Spanish researchers has confirmed that minority compounds that are in part responsible for the healthy aspects of olive oil can be maintained and potentially increased through sustainable irrigation strategies. In the study, researchers tested an experimental irrigation model on an olive grove in the hopes of identifying the effects of water stress on the oil.

Two years later, they demonstrated that regulated deficit irrigation has no effect on the quantity of the oil but increases phytoprostanes. Phytoprostanes are beneficial to vascular and immune system functioning. AFP

New triathlon incorporates meditation and yoga

Emily Laurence
Metro | New York

Colour runs are so last year. The latest organized fitness trend is mindful triathlons, which combine running, yoga and mediation. The biggest of them is Wanderlust, which hosted events across Canada this summer. We called up Wanderlust co-founder and event organizer Sean Hoess to get the details.

What exactly is a mindful triathlon?

Most triathlons are about how strong and fit you are. We wanted to create one that was much more about the mental side of things.

What can participants expect from the mediation portion of the festival?

First, there's a fun, humorous lecture led by our meditation teacher about the history of meditation, the benefits of it. Then there is 15 minutes of actual meditation.

How fit do people have to be to participate in Wanderlust?

The event is really designed to be achievable even by someone who has never run, practiced yoga or meditated before. The 5K is not a race — it's just about finishing, even if you end up walking.

A mindful triathlon is more about the mental side of things than the physical challenge. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Laugh at first sight a predictor for love

When two strangers meet, the man's efforts to be funny are often met with laughter from the woman that reflect more of an interest in him rather than the joke. And laughing together is a sure sign of a spark, according to a new study.

The research team set out to explore the relationship between humour and intelligence, and they now suggest men ditch their pick-up lines in favour of punchlines when they're looking for love.

"The idea that humour is a signal of intelligence doesn't give humour its due credit," says study author Jeffrey Hall of the University of Kansas. "If you meet someone who you can laugh with, it might mean your future relationship is going to be fun and filled with good cheer."

"If you meet someone who you can laugh with, it might mean your future relationship is going to be fun."
Researcher Jeffrey Hall

His paper Sexual Selection and Humor in Courtship: A Case for Warmth and Extroversion, published in the journal Evolutionary Psychology, found no connection between humour and intelligence.

In the first of three experiments 35 participants reflected on the Facebook profiles of 100 strangers to understand their personalities, and Hall compared their assessments with questionnaires filled out by the Facebook users.

Extroversion — defined as interest focused on others rather than oneself — was the predominant characteristic shared by humorous individuals, surprisingly more so than intelligence, according to the study.

Strangers honed in easily on whether or not the other was extroverted, and the study found little difference in the number of jokes women published on their Facebook pages as opposed to men.

In the second experiment, almost 300 students shared their academic performance records with Hall and expressed their feelings on humour and courtship by responding to a questionnaire.

Here, Hall found no connection between intelligence and humour, yet again he uncovered a relationship between humour and extroversion.

His next question pertained to the role of humour in romantic attraction and for his third and final experiment he recruited 51 pairs of single, heterosexual students who had never met.

Given their privacy, each pair of strangers was asked to talk for 10 minutes and then remark on their conversations in a survey.

Hall concluded that the more attempts a man made at humour that solicited an enthusiastic response from the woman indicated a likeliness that she was attracted to him, yet the reverse was not true for women who tried to be funny.

In conclusion, Hall says that having a sociable and agreeable personality — of which humour is an indicator — is an important characteristic sought out by singles yet often overlooked, and that shared laughter could be a path to lasting love. AFP

Williams back at pageant

Vanessa Williams was forced to resign as Miss America in 1984 after sexually explicit photos of her surfaced. She's gone on to sell more than seven million records and win a Grammy and Oscar.

MISS AMERICA

It's been 30 years since she returned her crown

Three decades after she gave up the crown amid a nude photo scandal, Vanessa Williams is returning to the Miss America pageant.

The Miss America Organization, Dick Clark Productions and the ABC television network announced Tuesday they are bringing back the award-winning actress and singer to serve as head judge for the 2016 competition. It begins Tuesday and culminates in the crowning of the next Miss America on Sunday.

Williams, the first African-American Miss America, won the title in 1984 but resigned after Penthouse magazine published sexually explicit photographs of her taken several years earlier.

She went on to have a successful career in film, television, music and Broadway.

Sam Haskell, executive chairman and CEO of the Miss America Organization, said his friendship with Williams pre-dated the turmoil caused by the release of the photos.

"I have been friends with Vanessa for 32 years," he said. "When the photos were published, there were people urging her to fight, but close supporters knew if she lost that fight that she would be completely removed from the history books. Instead of pursuing what would surely have been a long and stressful legal battle, Vanessa decided to resign and focus on her career. Vanessa and her family were hurt during the aftermath of the resignation, and that saddened me."

Haskell has been trying for a decade to bring Williams back to the Miss America stage, but this was the first year the logistics could be arranged.

Things seem to be going swimmingly between Bradley Cooper and Irina Shayk, who got to spend a bikini-clad beach visit over Labour Day weekend with ... Cooper's mother, Gloria Campano, according to Us Weekly.

Cooper, Shayk and Campano spent the extended holiday weekend in Atlantic City eating ice cream, hitting the surf and strolling on the boardwalk. According to eyewitnesses, all were in pretty good spirits, so it looks like former Sports Illustrated model Shayk has passed the mom test. So that's something.

Clinton pumped over Kanye for prez

On the one hand, the topic of Kanye West running for president in 2020 is silly and far off and not a serious topic of conversation, so must we humor such an idea now?

On the other hand, it's a welcome distraction from the current Donald Trump-soaked 2016 presidential race, so maybe Yeezy is doing us a solid. And as it turns out, Chelsea Clinton thinks he may be helping in other ways by raising the idea. "I definitely think who runs for office is really important," Clinton tells MTV News. "Even if him just saying that helps sparks a little boy or a little girl who was watching the VMAs to think, 'Oh wow, maybe I should do that,' that's awesome."

Franklin doc pulled from TIFF

A contentious Aretha Franklin documentary has been pulled from the lineup at the Toronto International Film Festival.

Festival organizers say they are disappointed that producers decided to withdraw the film.

Last week, a federal judge blocked the Telluride Film Festival from screening the doc without the singer's consent.

Franklin's lawyers argued that director Sydney Pollack said he wouldn't use footage he shot in 1972 for commercial purposes without her agreement. Pollack died of cancer in 2008.

A screening at the Chicago Film Festival in October has also been cancelled.

Three screenings were planned for the Toronto film festival, which begins Thursday.

"We are extremely disappointed that Toronto audiences will not be able to see this extraordinary piece of art," says the statement, issued Tuesday.

"The footage in the film is truly a cinematic treasure of 20th-century music and we hope global audiences will have opportunity to experience this film once a resolution is found." THE CANADIAN PRESS

ANNIVERSARY

Zac Efron getting schmoopy on Instagram

Stars, they're just like us: being corny about relationships on social media.

Zac Efron and girlfriend Sami Miro celebrated their one-year anniversary together over the weekend, and how is it we happen to know that? Because they both took to Instagram to commemorate the event and gush about each other with gag-inducing cuteness. While both of their photos featured exclamations of love, Miro went one better by also including an emoji of a boy and a girl holding hands. Get a room, you two.

REVIEW

BMW adds 5-door model but not much more room

Mike Goetz
For Metro Canada

The re-invention of the Mini by BMW has been an overwhelming success. People just love its quirkiness, distinctiveness and Britishness. And all that in a vehicle that just plain works. Fun to drive. Practical for its size. Fuel-efficient. Et cetera.

This third generation of BMW's tiny terror leverages even more BMW technology than the first two gens (it will share its platform and drivetrain with the upcoming BMW 1 Series), and the result is a more competent and refined Mini, with some added room inside.

Our test vehicle was the new 5-door Mini, which, debuted with the new-generation platform, gives you even a bit more room. But the rear doors are tiny, and the rear seating area still feels a bit Hobbit-like, so this Mini has not exactly morphed into a daily people hauler. But its ability to carry more stuff, and to get stuff in with more ease, is duly noted and appreciated.

The Mini has always been more about rewarding the driver anyway, and the theme continues with this 2015 model, with its lighter, stronger and stiffer chassis, and new suspension tricks, like the standard and adjustable drive modes, and the optional adjustable dampers. Even without this new tech, the Mini would still be great to drive — its lowness to the ground, and its low centre of gravity, always contribute to a fast and fun feel at the wheel. Almost 200 hp and a slick-shifting 6-speed manual doesn't hurt either.

A big round speedometer famously dominated the original Mini's instrument panel and "roundness" is still the interior theme of this modern Mini. Everything looks and feels less gimmicky inside compared to the previous Mini, but it still manages to be distinctly different and distinctly Mini. A version of the BMW's iDrive controller resides in the centre console to navigate the infotainment and comfort settings. Our tester had the new eight-inch touch screen, which is bundled with the package that gives you navigation, and allows you to enter characters directly on the screen.

This is a lovable car, but there is no getting around the fact that Mini is expensive for a smallish car. I guess another way of looking at it would be that Mini allows you to go small without giving up brand cache, personality, performance, and all the amenities of a premium vehicle.

Lots of great alternatives in this price and performance class, if moving up in size is not an issue and/or if a "real" backseat is more of a priority. The VW GTI would be one for sure to look at if you're leaning that way. Otherwise, there is not much not to like about this new Mini.

2015 Subaru Legacy

When Subaru launched the current-generation Legacy, it was right on the heels of its wicked-looking Legacy concept car. It's interesting and perhaps confusing how different these two cars are despite public reveals that nearly overlap. Most notable is the taller greenhouse and tamer appearance of the production car. As always, all-wheel-drive is standard and the four- and six-cylinder engines return, but they've been updated a bit.

JEFF MELNYCHUK WHEELBASE MEDIA

THE RUNDOWN

1 Boxer engines
The four- and six-cylinder engines have two banks of pistons that fire at 180 degrees to each other. The layout is "flat" and not a "V." This means a low centre of gravity and efficient packaging.

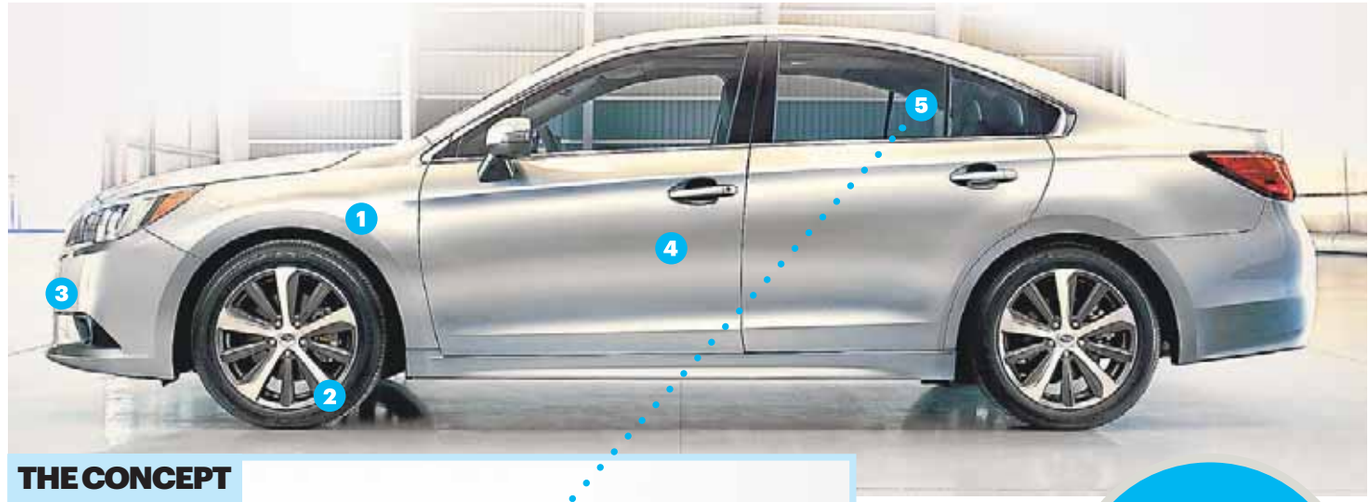
2 Braking
Torque vectoring can apply brake pressure to the inside front wheel for more neutral cornering.

3 Lighter and more aerodynamic
The car has an aluminum hood and a one-piece bumper/nose with no seams. Active shutters on some models push air around the car at faster speeds.

4 Inside
Subaru claims largest interior in its class.

5 Design
The production car has a taller greenhouse than the concept.

SOURCE: SUBARU



THE CONCEPT

6 Curves
High front wheel arches? Gone.

7 Mirrors
The concept also had some funky mirrors.

8 Cuts
Matching vertical panel cuts didn't make it to production.

CRASH PREVENTION
"EyeSight" can "see" traffic in front. If the car calculates that there will be an impact, it puts on the brakes. It only comes on the upper trims.

DRIVING FORCE

Seal, structure, tread: There's a lot riding on those four tires

Jil McIntosh
For Metro Canada

At first glance, tires look pretty simple: They're just round and black. But they're actually very complex, consisting of numerous layers and specially-formulated rubber compounds.

"The purpose of the tire is to provide the braking, accelerating and cornering capabilities to make the vehicle go where the driver wants," says Ron Margadonna, senior technical marketing manager for Michelin North America. "It's the only component of the vehicle that touches the ground."

Tire manufacturers have to look at three basic elements when designing a tire. The first is the seal so that it holds air, which includes an inner liner made of composite rubber. The only thing holding the tire onto the rim is air pressure, so it's imperative that the tire seals properly.

Next is the structure, including the sidewall, which gives the tire its strength. Finally there's the tread, which has to grip the pavement.

The compound used to make the tread is composed of such materials as natural and synthetic rubber, oil, silica and carbon black, which gives it its colour. Rubber chemists create different formulas, depending on how the tire will be used. Summer tires need a firmer compound that won't get too soft in hot weather, while winter tires need to stay supple in cold temperatures. All-season tires use a compound that's approximately halfway between the two.

Tires may look simple, but they're actually very complex. Blocks of tread determine how the tire will perform. COURTESY MICHELIN

The tread's design is a vital part of the tire, and engineers have to ensure that it's the right pattern for the job. "The grooves are for foul weather such as rain or snow, everything but dry," Margadonna says. "The grooves channel the water away. If it was always dry, you wouldn't need them."

The pattern creates blocks of tread, which determine how the tire will perform. Winter tires will typically have numerous small blocks, which create more sharp edges to bite through snow, while high-performance tires will have large, strong blocks to stay rigid during hard cornering.

The edge of the tread is called the shoulder, while the small slits running through the tread are called sipes. These spread open as the tire touches the road, providing even more gripping surface.

The tread eventually wears down with use, and so tire manufacturers mould in small rubber bars, called wear bars, which run across the width of the tire's tread. They're deeply buried on a new tire, but they become easier to spot as the tire wears down. If the tread has worn enough that you can quickly spot the wear bars, then it's time to replace the tire.

TIRE CARE

- Keeping your tires properly inflated can help save gas. A vehicle uses about 20 per cent of its fuel energy just to overcome the rolling resistance of its tires.
- The recommended air pressure is on a label inside the driver's door, while the number on the tire is the maximum it can hold.
- Run-flat tires can support the vehicle's weight even when they're flat, and cars that have them don't have spare tires.

24-year-old tabbed for first post-injury start Saturday

Toronto right-hander Marcus Stroman will make his first start of the season Saturday when the AL East-leading Blue Jays face New York at Yankee Stadium.

The 24-year-old underwent surgery in March after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee.

Toronto general manager Alex Anthopoulos discussed the decision at Fenway Park before the team's Tuesday game against the Boston Red Sox.

"He's completely healthy, that's the first priority and concern for us," Anthopoulos said. "Everything we discussed with him has been health, and everything we discussed with our staff has been health. He feels good. We've checked for inflammation and he's been cleared."

ROOKIE YEAR

Stroman was 11-6 with a 3.65 ERA in 26 appearances (20 starts) as a rookie in 2014.

Anthopoulos said Monday's losing pitcher, Mark Buehrle, went back to Toronto to get a cortisone shot in his pitching shoulder. His next scheduled start was pushed back to Tuesday in Atlanta after he was tagged for five runs and nine hits in 3-1/3 innings in an 11-4 loss to Boston on Monday.

"He's done this before," Anthopoulos said of Buehrle. "He's been streaky and came back and pitched really well. The guy's been doing it so long, you don't bet against him."

Stroman made two minor-league rehab starts. He gave up four runs on eight hits over three innings in the second one Monday for triple-A Buffalo.

"We've gone slow with him and he's recovered well," Anthopoulos said. "He wouldn't have been out there and he wouldn't have thrown (simulated) games or rehab starts if there was any concern at all."

At the time of the injury, he was expected to miss the entire season. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Thank you to every single person who helped me along this journey. Forever grateful for all of y'all. So many emotions right now! Marcus Stroman in a tweet

Cilic, Tsonga write an epic

U.S. OPEN

Reigning champion from Croatia survives Frenchman

Pushed to a fifth set after coming so close to victory, defending champion Marin Cilic kept his act together and held on to get back to the U.S. Open semifinals.

Unfazed by wasting a big lead or match points, the ninth-seeded Cilic stretched his winning streak at Flushing Meadows to 12 matches by beating 19th-seeded Jo-Wilfried Tsonga of France 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-7 (3), 6-4 on Tuesday night.

"A big mental fight," the Croatian called it, "especially after losing that fourth set."

The quarter-final took nearly four hours in Arthur Ashe Stadium, delaying the start of the women's match between Serena and Venus Williams.

Go to metronews.ca for coverage of Tuesday's late matches.

Cilic appeared to be heading to a relatively straightforward win after taking the first two sets, considering he was 47-0 in his Grand Slam career when up by that margin.

But Tsonga took the third set by finally converting his seventh break point of the match, and then serving it out from 15-30 by taking the last three points with a pair of service winners at 131 m.p.h. and 132 m.p.h., followed by a 124 m.p.h. ace.

Tsonga then saved three match points in the fourth set to force a fifth.

"Jo just came up with amazing shots," Cilic said.

In the last set, Cilic broke at love to lead 3-2, and didn't falter this time, although he did need another two match points to close it out, double-faulting on one, before finally winning when Tsonga sailed a forehand long.

In the semifinals, Cilic will face No. 1 Novak Djokovic or No. 18 Feliciano Lopez of Spain, who were scheduled to meet in Tuesday's last match.

MLB HARVEY NOT A WRITEOFF AFTER 180

Mets ace Matt Harvey pitches on Tuesday night against the Washington Nationals in D. C.

Having returned from elbow surgery this season, Harvey is embroiled in a bit of controversy. The 26-year-old wants to pitch through the Mets' playoff push, but is under doctor's orders not to exceed a 180-innings count post-surgery.

Mets manager Terry Collins said Harvey, who has pitched 171-2/3 innings after Tuesday night's game, isn't being written off.

"If the last series of the season means us getting in or out and Matt Harvey needs to pitch, he's pitching. That'll be his playoff."

Division win no longer guarantees top 4 in NBA

The NBA will now seed playoff teams solely by their record, throwing out the top-four protection for teams who win their divisions.

The expected change was approved Tuesday by the league's Board of Governors. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bills re-sign Cassel just days after his dismissal

In the short time it took the Buffalo Bills to release and re-sign Matt Cassel, the journeyman quarterback didn't have a chance to clean out his locker.

For the Bills, the decision to cut Cassel was made after he lost the starting job to Tyrod Taylor last week. Cassel was set to make a $4.15-million base salary this season, which was deemed too expensive.

A team person familiar with the decision said the Bills risked cutting the 10-year veteran in hopes they would have the opportunity to re-sign him at a more salary-cap friendly contract. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rooney becomes England's top scorer

EURO 2016 QUALIFIERS

United striker breaks 45-year record in win over Swiss

Wayne Rooney broke England's scoring record as the hosts maintained their perfect record in European Championship qualifying with a 2-0 win over Switzerland on Tuesday that secured top spot in Group E.

Rooney slammed in a penalty in the 84th minute for his 50th international goal, eclipsing fellow Manchester United player Bobby Charlton's 45-year-old England record.

England had already qualified for next year's tournament in France and lacked intensity for most of the game. But substitute Harry Kane opened the scoring in the 67th minute after a cross from Luke Shaw and Raheem Sterling was then tripped in the area to set up the spot kick for Rooney.

"To be the country's all-time leading goal-scorer before the age of 30 is not something I could ever have dreamed of," the 29-year-old Rooney said.

"I was a bit emotional out there and it's something to be extremely proud of. I'm happy it's done and hopefully I can kick on from here and concentrate on the team and our success in the future."

Switzerland stayed second in the group with Slovenia climbing to third by beating Estonia 1-0. In Slovenia, Robert Beric boosted the hosts' hopes of reaching the Euro 2016 by scoring the winner in the 63rd minute. Lithuania needed an injury-time winner to beat San Marino 2-1 in a game both teams finished with 10 men.

Switzerland could have qualified with a win if Slovenia-Estonia had been a draw, but all three teams remain in the hunt for the second automatic qualifying spot. Switzerland has 15 points with Slovenia on 12 and Estonia on 10 with two rounds of games remaining. The third-place team enters a playoff.

Stamkos at ease over lack of deal extension

Tampa Bay forward Steven Stamkos is sleeping comfortably at night while Lightning fans are tossing and turning about him not having a contract extension in place with the NHL team.

It's possible that Stamkos may not have a new deal before training camp begins next week.

But the 25-year-old Markham, Ont., native is at peace with the situation as talks between his agency, Newport Sports, and the Lightning continue.

"We'll see," Stamkos said. "It could happen tomorrow, it could happen next week. If not, then you get into camp and then you deal with it then and you have discussions."

Stamkos said he and his representatives hadn't yet made a decision about whether they'll negotiate during the season.

He's owed US$5.5 million this season and carries a salary-cap hit of $7.5 million. Stamkos also has a no-movement clause for this part of his contract.

Tampa's Steven Stamkos has remained calm throughout deal talks. GETTY IMAGES

The conventional wisdom is that Stamkos will eventually end up with a deal from the Lightning close to the matching $84-million, eight-year contracts Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane got from current Stanley Cup champs Chicago Blackhawks a year ago.

RECIPE Tilapia with olives, cherry tomatoes and basil

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com
@rosereisman

Tilapia has a delicate flavour and is budget-friendly. I always like to have a stronger flavoured sauce or topping to match this mild fish. If cherry tomatoes are unavailable, use seeded and chopped plum tomatoes. Serves 4.

Ready in
Prep time: 15 minutes
Cook time: 10 minutes

Ingredients
- 1 large egg
- 2 Tbsp milk or water
- 1 1/2 lb tilapia fillets (4)
- 2/3 cup seasoned bread crumbs, store-bought
- 2 tsp vegetable oil
- 1 1/2 cups halved cherry tomatoes
- 2 Tbsp diced black olives
- 2 Tbsp diced green olives
- 2 Tbsp chopped basil
- 2 Tbsp chopped parsley
- 1 Tbsp olive oil
- 2 tsp low-sodium soy sauce
- 1 tsp crushed garlic

Directions
1. Combine the egg and milk and place in a shallow dish. Dip each fillet in the egg and milk mixture then in the bread crumbs. In a nonstick skillet sprayed with vegetable spray, heat the oil and cook the tilapia for five minutes, turning halfway or just until the fish flakes.
2. Combine the tomatoes, olives, basil, parsley, olive oil, soy sauce and garlic and serve overtop the tilapia.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
There is no point trying to force others to see things your way because that will make them even more determined to take an opposing viewpoint. All you can do is present them with the facts.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Why are you feeling so guilty about all the fun you've been having? Most likely it is because of those tales of woe you keep hearing from people who have not had it so good. Yes, life is unfair. Too bad.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Social occasions and travel plans are especially well starred, so don't sit there doing nothing, get out and enjoy yourself.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Just because someone has a different outlook to you does not mean you cannot work together or even be friends. Say what you have to say, then open your ears to what they have to tell you.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
There is no right way or wrong way to do what needs to be done, there is only the way that works, so if you are happy with the way things are going then carry on.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You will find yourself in a minority of one today and those who oppose you will be in positions of power. Do you back down? No you do not. Be intellectually aggressive.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Something you said a long time ago will return to either help or hinder you today. If nothing else it will remind you that causes have consequences. Remember that the next time you open your mouth.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You are rather restless at the moment, especially on the mental level. But that's good. The more you allow your mind to wander the more ideas and insights you will come up with.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You will have to spell things out in the simplest of terms for other people today. It would be nice if everyone were as quick on the uptake as you but they are not.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Cosmic activity in the career area of your chart makes this an important time for negotiations. Try to strike a balance between cooperation and forcefulness — you'll get things done and get more money in the bank.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be tempted to speak harshly about someone today, but the planets suggest you will hurt them more if you ignore them. Living well is the best revenge.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Defend your beliefs with every weapon at your disposal. When others challenge your opinion, hit back twice as hard. Give them no quarter. Show them no mercy.
